ABOUT SARA

Sara F. Hathaway is an author, screenwriter, self-defense instructor, podcast host, and audio drama producer whose work empowers people to face uncertainty with confidence, skills, and resilience. Her central philosophy is that you can be confident in any survival situation if you have the skills and proper mental attitude. She wants people to learn through a fictional experience just how fragile our manufactured society is — and how faith, family, preparedness, and community provide the foundation for thriving in a changing world.

She lives these values as a homesteader in the piney forests of East Texas (Lindale), raising chickens and tending her garden with her family. A happily married mother of two boys, she delights in quality family time hiking, camping, and building a faith-centered life. Sara graduated from California State University, Sacramento with a B.S. in Business Administration and published her first novel in 2014. She is a fully licensed insurance agent in Texas, California, Arizona, and Nevada and holds a Line Producer Master certification from Stage 32 (script recommended). She is an advanced martial artist and self-defense instructor who hosts seminars.
