

Sara F. Hathaway

Sara is an author, a fighter, a mother, and a wife. Her writings' central philosophy is that you can be confident in any survival situation if you have the skills and proper mental attitude. She wants people to learn through a fictional experience just how fragile our manufactured society is.

She puts these philosophies into practice by practicing various disciplines of martial arts and homesteading with her family. Sara graduated from the California State University of Sacramento with a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration and published her first novel in 2014.

Sara currently lives in the piney forest of east Texas. As a happily married woman with two boys, she delights in quality family time hiking and camping. Besides writing and fighting, she raises chickens, tends to her garden, and works as an insurance agent during the week.

The Changing Earth

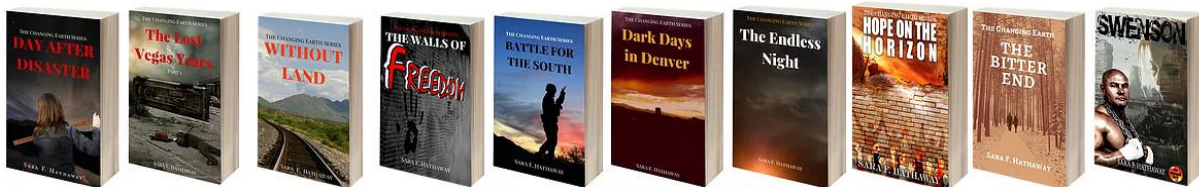

Experience the adventure of Erika Moore as she enters a world turned upside down by a series of natural disasters. Barely surviving the Sacramento disaster, Erika, a young wife and mother, must navigate the broken countryside to find her family. Her heroic story home makes her a legend among survivors, but she bears the weight of the scarring experience.

Nine years later, the government institutes tyrannical laws to control the chaos. The outcome is a two-class society of landowners vs. refugees. On a quest to establish freedom and peace for her family, Erika joins the federal government, the mercenary forces, and the militia fighters. Betrayal at every level makes her confidence waver, but loyal companions emerge.

Carefully watching Erika's progress, the federal government's finest bounty hunter, TJ Swenson, begins the hunt. His mission is to silence Erika's movement and control the narrative. Finally, capturing the feisty woman, he puts his will against hers. Both individuals are changed forever, and the struggle for the leadership of the surviving pieces of the United States ensues.
