

Sara F. Hathaway

Sara is an author, a fighter, a mother, and a wife. Her writings' central philosophy is that you can be confident in any survival situation if you have the skills and proper mental attitude. She wants people to learn through a fictional experience just how fragile our manufactured society is.

She puts these philosophies into practice by practicing various disciplines of martial arts and homesteading with her family. Sara graduated from the California State University of Sacramento with a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration and published her first novel in 2014. She hosts seminars on self-defense, and avoiding abductions and sexual assaults.

Sara currently lives in the piney forest of east Texas. As a happily married woman with two boys, she delights in quality family time hiking and camping. Besides writing and fighting, she raises chickens, tends to her garden, and works as an insurance agent during the week.
